

Competence vs. Competition

Those who lack competence
are usually in competition.

Competence
serves and unites;
competition
fights and divides.

Competence
is cultivation of
yourself;
competition
is opposition to another.

Competence engenders
utter confidence;
competition leads to
other-destruction.

Competence breeds
self-assurance;
competition relies on
other-diminution.

Competence springs from
sufficiency;
competition expresses
inadequacy.

Competence endures
and will last;
competition wills the other
to be last.

Competence satisfies
a need of your soul;
competition leaves you
solitary and sole.

Therefore,
to achieve a life of
fulfillment and friendship,
cultivate competence;
to avoid the void of
emptiness and enmity,
renounce competition.

© Msgr. Walter Niebrzydowski
January 9, 2000
Fr-Walter@nyc.rr.com
www.fatherwaltersparish.org